

“I want to be a role model”

Nicholas Freese '17 waits in line to participate in commencement.

When Nicholas Freese heard his name announced as the recipient of the Community College Presidents' Scholarship in Honor of Val Ogden, there was one person he wanted to discuss it with, above all others: his 4-year-old daughter, Sadie.

“I really want to know what my daughter thinks about this,” he said as he stood in line to receive his degree, clearly still stunned by the news that he would be able to attend Washington State University Vancouver for two years, tuition-free, in order to complete his bachelor's degree. Clark College President Bob Knight made the announcement during the 2017 Clark College Commencement ceremony.

Nicholas Freese stands, stunned, as he learns that he has received the 2017-2018 Community College Presidents' Scholarship.

It might seem strange to want to know a toddler's opinion on your academic achievements, but for Freese, Sadie has been at the heart of his pursuit of higher education. "With her, I have the opportunity to be awesome, just from the get-go," he said during an interview prior to Commencement. "She can just think of Daddy as this great guy who's worked hard and pursued his goals."

Freese is painfully aware that many people who have known him since his own childhood might not see him in such an unambiguously positive light. Growing up in Albuquerque, New Mexico, Freese began getting into trouble around the time he entered high school. Trying to escape a violent home life with an alcoholic father, Freese began staying with friends—including "some people I probably shouldn't have been hanging out with," he said.

By his junior year, Freese was struggling with his own addiction issues. He bounced between alternative schools, but didn't graduate from any; he tried rehab, but it didn't stick. For the next few years, he wandered from city to city: Denver, Seattle, Honolulu, Saipan. By the time he landed in Vancouver, he had made the commitment to get sober, but hadn't found much direction past that.

All that changed after Sadie was born. "At first, it was like, 'Daddy's being clean,' but after a while I felt like, 'That's great, but what's Daddy going to do?' Freese recalled. "I don't want to be borderline poverty, like I grew up. I want to be a role model."

Freese enrolled at Clark College. At first, he found college daunting—less academically than logistically. "I didn't understand how registration worked," he said. "I had to use my resources. I had to ask for advice, and I'm not used to asking for advice. I'd be in the Financial Aid Office every day for a week, trying to figure things out."

But as Freese continued at Clark, he learned how to navigate its support systems. Advisors showed him how to plan his degree; he met friends while working out in the Fitness Center; he took advantage of other free and subsidized services like the Counseling and Health Center and the college's dental clinic. In the end, Freese graduated with honors, earning a cumulative GPA of 3.77.

It hasn't always been easy. Freese had to balance his studies with caring for Sadie and volunteering in his community. He serves as a mentor to other recovering addicts, works on clean-up parties in his neighborhood, and participates in activities aimed at improving police-community relations. Additionally, he has worked during much of his time at Clark, though he credits his wife, Ashley, with keeping the family financially afloat while he pursues his education.

"She's paying the bills," he said. "She's working toward this just as much as I am."

Freese, now 28, plans to major in public affairs at WSUV, with the long-term goal of becoming a lawyer. "I want to be a voice for those who don't have a voice," he said. "I want to help people."

A first-generation college graduate, Freese said he hopes that sharing the story of his struggles and success will help to inspire others who might be facing their own challenges. "I want to show people in a similar case that this is possible," he said.

For Freese, earning this scholarship means that he will be able to concentrate on his studies at WSUV instead of on how to pay for them. But it also carries deeper meaning than the easing of financial burdens.

"What it means to me is that I'm there, I've reached that level," he said, raising his hand to about chest-height. "I'm not just getting an associate degree—I'm doing well."

And he knows just the little girl to celebrate that with.
