“Carly Rae led the charge to set up a new social media channel like TikTok which appeals to the students, and nurturing the channel with relevant and engaging posts. In addition to holding quarterly meetings with all social media handlers from the college, Carly Rae shows her cooperative spirit by taking the initiative to work on a Canvas course in social media considerations and best practices for college colleagues who may be considering setting up new social media accounts and has enabled departments to better manage their social media accounts. Specifically, it was evident with her outreach work with Financial Aid re: FAFSA; Entry Services re: Application, Registration & Information Sessions; Tutoring; and community events like Noche de Familia and monthly student activities. She finds ways to promote these events on behalf of the college and diligently monitors the responses and results of the posts.”

“Carly Rae is always patient and helpful and willing to help all who come to her seeking help with their department’s social media accounts. She works closely with various departments throughout the college to revive their social media accounts – often successful in solving mysteries of missing or duplicate accounts, reinstating usernames, and forgotten passwords. This past summer, she researched and worked with the AAG office to update the college's social media guidelines to ensure compliance with current laws. Last fall, Carly Rae also invited her former college professor and award-winning writer, Kaveh Akbar, to speak as part of the Columbia Writers Series."

"Carly Rae is laser-focused on the college's strategic plan and our commitment to DEI. She actively looks for opportunities to showcase our DEI initiatives, events, and messaging in all the social media posts she produces. She is always ready to respond to difficult comments on the social media channels that she manages with a positive, equity-centered response."
