

Phoenix Flies High

Congratulations to the staff of Phoenix. Clark's literary and art journal just won third place in the Western-Pacific division of the Community College Humanities Association's 2013 Literary Magazine Competition.

"I think the quality of Phoenix is a reflection of the quality of the strong arts program that the college, and the greater community, continue to support," says art professor and Phoenix advisor Kathrena Halsinger. "The arts are the stuff of life and therefore are relevant to all. We really work hard to be inclusive and get people across campus to be involved. We've also been fortunate to be supported by our departments and the ASCC to keep the program strong."
